

Customer WIP Design Notes - Group E

Bolded are customer notes

Unbolded underneath are reactions to the notes. These notes are from the 3rd check-in, but we believe updating responses to them is good to explain how we did or did not incorporate them and why. The final notes are on the page below.

-The resources tab changes were good, however the buttons should be symmetrical

The resources tab buttons were made uniform through using custom CS code to forcefully make their minimum width the same. They are more spread out than we'd like (2 per row) but the end result looks much more organized overall. There are still several ideas we have had about this design and improving it, for example putting a miscellaneous links section (for the links moved from PDFs and Links) to make it an even 14 options, or changing it so suicidal ideation is at the front and center instead of at the bottom (Or even do both, so its a sort of diamond shape).

-The buttons should be the same design across the site

-There shouldn't be such a focus on donating, and there should be a help hotline re-added

Donating was made less of a focus, just being another part of the list of pages. More about the hotline later.

-The Support Initiatives section in the Home menu has a nice picture, but the text is hard to read. It also uses a lot of red, which can be a triggering color to some.

The OSI-CAN colors are blue and red, so our initial design used a lot of both. We have since moved to using mostly blue and much lighter reds as opposed to the deeper red normally used in the site.

-Using pictures that are text is not recommended, because search algorithms will not understand that text to recommend the site to people who search similar things.

There are a couple of spots that fix this, not as many as we'd like however. Notably the partners page should have some way for search engines to figure out who the partners are.

-The Home page does not need the logo because the logo is already on the header

The home page now has a more unique header so it looks more natural to have the logo's location shift.

Customer Final Notes:

-The color change is a big improvement, with much less focus on red.

-The suicide hotline should have been put back where it was.

We had a very specific design for this in mind, however we never figured out how to add it into wordpress. Given more time we would either figure out how to make the popup function, or add it as a banner you cannot close as part of the header. The hotline is important and we were made aware it is better to always have it on the site than to hide it elsewhere.

-The resources tab is good, and works well.

Not much to add, the resources tab is effective, and there is a failsafe in the form of a help line.

-Using pictures that are text is not recommended, because search algorithms will not understand that text to recommend the site to people who search similar things.

As mentioned above, this was fixed in some ways but many other places still have this issue.
